2008

Volume 3 Issue 9

Dear John Rothbarth,

Let this serve as the wake up call that our 2008 Information for Older Adults RESOURCE GUIDE publishing cycle has begun. The 2008 St. Louis Regional Edition is scheduled to be published in August. As always, the listings are free of charge. The publication is funded through paid advertising which we hope you will support.

There are a number of planned changes for 2008, all designed to enhance the publication's value. For example:

- All free category listings will be entered online at www.stlouistimes.com!
- Each listing organization will receive a unique page of their own on our website, from which they can enter and/or edit their own information 365 days a year!
- A search engine will be added to our website allowing users to search specifically for the information they need, such as resources by zip code, county, category, etc.!
- Distribution will be expanded within the five Missouri counties and seven Illinois counties we currently serve!

Also, we want to assist your organization in providing more value to your present and future clients and customers. In exchange for your free listing(s) in the GUIDE, we ask you to please place our RESOURCE GUIDE's logo and link on your website. Just follow this link and see how easily this can be done: www.stlouistimes.com. By the way, there's even more announcements and enhancements coming your way, so stay tuned!

EMPLOYMENT TRENDS

US: An Initiative to Attract Baby Boomers to Fed Jobs

The war for talent is hitting the federal government hard, as more than one-third of the full-time permanent federal workforce gets ready to retire or leave in the next five years, according to the Partnership for Public Service at today's launch of FedExperience Transitions to Government - an initiative to help match government's critical hiring needs with the talents of baby boomers looking for encore careers where they can find interesting and challenging work.

At the launch, the Partnership and IBM, a major potential source of talent, announced that they will pilot the Transitions to Government initiative with the U.S. Department of Treasury. The goal is to identify, recruit, and hire interested IBM employees and retirees and match them to key federal government jobs.

Nearly 14,000 mission-critical jobs need to be filled at the U.S. Department of Treasury in the next two years, including 7,950 IRS agents and tax examiners. Procurement, IT and accounting positions are also on their "most wanted" job list.

Working with AARP, Civic Ventures and other stakeholders, the Partnership and IBM will expand the effort to other agencies and encourage other corporate leaders to join the initiative.

"FedExperience is a win-win-win," said Max Stier, Partnership for Public Service president. "Boomers get their second career where they can find meaningful work, our government gets the talent it needs to fill looming shortages and the American people get a government that has the talent to service its people."

At the FedExperience initiative launch, the Partnership released A Golden Opportunity: Recruiting Baby Boomers Into Government, a report that lays out the case for, and barriers to, connecting baby boomers with federal job opportunities. The primary recommendation of the report is to create a model for the federal government, which spurred the Transitions to Government pilot project launched today with IBM. Based on a nationwide survey of older workers age 50 to 65, report findings include:

- Older, experienced workers are planning to continue working...and for quite a while. Seventy-one percent of workers age 55 - 59 surveyed reported they plan to work for at least six years; 29 percent, 11 years or more.

- Old workers' skills align with government's talent needs. Many occupational areas where government currently hires higher percentages of older workers -- IT, engineering, legal and accounting -- are the same areas in which federal agencies say they will have mission critical openings.
- Older workers are interested in government service. Fifty-three percent of older workers surveyed are at least somewhat interested in federal government work -- of those, 26 percent are extremely or very interested. Fifty-eight percent of those surveyed agree that "there are good jobs for people like me in the federal government."
- Experienced workers who enter government service like it. Most experienced workers who recently entered government in mid and senior-level positions prefer federal service to their previous jobs.

The report flags five key barriers the federal government must address in order to successfully tap older, experienced workers to fill mission critical job openings. The barriers include:

1. Lack of knowledge. Only 11 percent of older Americans are knowledgeable about government job opportunities.
2. Negative Perceptions. Sixty-six percent of respondents believe the federal government is ineffective in solving problems today and helping people.
3. Isolation. Only 50% of federal job openings are open to nongovernment candidates.
4. A broken hiring process. Fifty-seven percent of older Americans believe the federal government application process is fairly or very difficult compared with other jobs.
5. Mutual skepticism. Large segments of the federal workforce and new employees coming from outside government are skeptical of one another.

The federal government offers many flexibilities of interest to older workers, including flexible work schedules, job sharing, increased vacation time for experienced new hires, and teleworking arrangements.

GLOBAL AGING

Why Population Aging Matters : A Global Perspective

People are living longer and, in some parts of the world, healthier lives. This represents one of the crowning achievements of the last century but also a significant challenge. Longer lives must be planned for. Societal aging may affect economic growth and many other issues, including the sustainability of families, the ability of states and communities to provide resources for older citizens, and international relations. The Global Burden of Disease, a study conducted by the World Health Organization and the World Bank, with partial support from the U.S. National Institute on Aging, predicts a very large increase in disability caused by increases in age-related chronic disease in all regions of the world. In a few decades, the loss of health and life worldwide will be greater from noncommunicable or chronic diseases (e.g., cardiovascular disease, dementia and Alzheimer's disease, cancer, arthritis, and diabetes) than from infectious diseases, childhood diseases, and accidents.

Despite the weight of scientific evidence, the significance of population aging and its global implications have yet to be fully appreciated. There is a need to raise awareness about not only global aging issues but also the importance of rigorous cross-national scientific research and policy dialogue that will help us address the challenges and opportunities of an aging world.

Preparing financially for longer lives and finding ways to reduce aging-related disability should become national and global priorities. Experience shows that for nations, as for individuals, it is critical to address problems sooner rather than later. Waiting significantly increases the costs and difficulties of addressing these challenges.

LONGEVITY

2008 Living to 100 Symposium

With increased life expectancy and rising healthcare costs, individuals are faced with growing challenges in maintaining their quality of health and lifestyle in living to older ages. As a result, employers and governments are faced with new opportunities and challenges as they respond to an aging population. Those were the central topics of discussion among nearly 200 actuaries, demographers, gerontologists, biologists and researchers from across the globe who participated in the 2008 Living to 100 Symposium in Orlando.

Sponsored by the Society of Actuaries (SOA), the Living to 100 Symposium highlighted why people are living longer, what type of challenges they are facing and what this means for employers. The leading issues of the conference included understanding the aging process and the resulting consequences to life spans, longevity risk, retirement, healthcare and social and financial systems. The conference balanced discussions on the biology and science of aging, healthcare and quality of life issues, life insurance, use of annuities in managing retirement risks and statistics related to mortality trends and the aging population. A key value of the symposium series is that it brings together actuaries and longevity experts to share information and differing perspectives to advance the state of aging research and to refine estimates and projections of the mortality and future number of individuals at high ages.

A leading actuary noted that a combination of factors affect longevity. "There is no simple equation to living to 100. It involves socio-economic and genetic factors, birth order and healthy living," said symposium co-chair Tim Harris, FSA, MAAA, principal, Milliman, Inc. "Quality of life is key in living to an older age and potentially to 100 years. However, people living to 100 face great odds of not having enough funds and could ultimately run out of assets."

Steven G. Vernon, FSA, EA, MAAA, producer of The Quest: For Long Life, Health and Prosperity, and president of Rest-of-Life Communications, noted, "There is a 'Catch-22' for individuals as they need to manage their resources for the rest of their lives, yet they don't know how long to expect to live. This is further compounded by the number of individuals taking a lump sum, but not planning accordingly to make it last through their entire retirement."

OP-ED

Julia Ostropolsky / Bi-Lingual International Assistant Services

Publisher's Message: This Op-Ed column is available to anyone wishing to share his or her thoughts with our readership, and represents the thoughts and/or sentiments of the writer only.

Many of the elderly and disabled are unaware of the Welfare Reform which stipulates that no financial support, however little is to be given to those refugees who fail to become naturalized citizens of United States by the time they've been here for seven years. Foreign - born may speak 5 languages but English may not be one of them. Refugees who fled the wars in their home country may have never gone to school, but are expected to perform well n spoken and written English, know History and Civics, and perform well at an interview Examination. As a result, some were not successful and many never tried applying for naturalization. Extremely rewarding opportunity to see one blossom as one begins learning about the laws and regulations of new motherland, its history and legal structure, conversational English, writing and reading maybe for the first time. To see an elderly or disabled student of yours reach their high potential, to witness a smile on their face as they gladly proclaim loyalty to USA speaks volumes to one's patriotic feelings, one's caring attitude and loving heart.

- (1) Washington University has a PREP Project - Parents & Children Preparing for Aging - that is looking for people age 60 and over to participate in an education program and research project that looks at how families make decisions together as parents grow older. In this project families learn what issues they'll need to address as parents age; whether parents and children agree on plans for the future; how to communicate on important decisions; and what community resources are available. To participate you should be at least 60 years old, be unmarried (widowed, single, etc.) and have at least 2 adult children in the St. Louis area. The project involves filling out a brief mail survey and then coming to Washington University with your children (at any time you choose) to discuss your answers with each other. The total time for the project is less than two hours. You and your family will be paid $80 in total for your participation. If you are interested, or for more information, please contact Dr. Brian Carpenter, PREP Project, at 314- 935-6173 or send an email to aging@arts.wustl.edu.

Volunteer Opportunities

The Long Term Care Ombudsman Program has a unique volunteer opportunity: Volunteer Ombudsman.

Volunteers visit nursing home residents, educate them about their resident rights, and advocate on behalf of residents to resolve complaints and disputes. Requires 12 hours of formal training and six hours of mentor supervised experience which is provided by the Long Term Care Ombudsman Program. Volunteers are expected to spend a minimum of four hours per week in the program. Call 314-918-8222 or email info@ltcop-stl.org for more information.

- Volunteers needed for Rebuilding Together - St. Louis. We repair homes for low- income homeowners, particularly the elderly and disabled. Volunteers repair over 100 homes on one spring Saturday. We are looking volunteers to work throughout the year in our office. Individuals who are willing to work 4 hours/day for 1-2 days/week (morning or afternoon - flexible hours) with computer skills preferred. For more information call 314-918-9918 and ask for Lynne Rajani.
- St. Louis Society for the Blind and Visually Impaired has opportunities for volunteer service with one-to-one matches. Times are flexible and the volunteer assists the individual through friendly visits, reading mail and for pleasure and helping with correspondence, shopping, walking in the neighborhood, and transportation to appointments. Volunteers are matched based upon which tasks they are willing to perform and proximity to their home. If interested, please contact Karen Skender, Volunteer Coordinator at 314-968-9000.
- The Alzheimer's Association, St. Louis Chapter is urgently seeking new volunteers to assist with Helpline telephone support. Helpline volunteers answer calls from families and professionals requesting information about Alzheimer's disease and related dementias, chapter services and community resources. Many Helpline volunteers have cared for a loved one with Alzheimer's disease or work in the field of aging. However, anyone interested is encouraged to call. Training and guidance are provided, and Helpline volunteerism is one of the most rewarding positions we offer. Helpline volunteers work one 3-4 hour shift per week during normal business hours. If you are interested (or know of someone who may be interested) please contact Jennifer Phillips at 314- 801-0414 or jennifer.phillips@alzstl.org for more information.
