September 15, 2008 Edition

Dear John Rothbarth,

This issue is a week late but I've got a doctor's note. Really. My Father's Alzheimer's disease was just updated last week to the severe stage and we were told the time had come for us to move him into a facility. Although the facility decision had already been made, I took my Mother a couple of days later to revisit the facility and to complete the paperwork. She didn't feel well when we arrived so we left shortly thereafter as her symptoms progressed. Two hours later, we were in the emergency room and 18 hours later, she had abdominal surgery. In between, I picked my Father up from adult day care and moved him into the facility for "an interim stay" while Mom prepared for surgery. Needless to say I've been a bit busy so I hope you will forgive the delay in getting this issue out. (By the way, the surgery was successful and her recovery, while expected to be lengthy, is progressing well.)

On a brighter note don't forget to come and get a free copy of the 2008 Information for Older Adults RESOURCE GUIDE and sing along with ELVIS at St. Louis Times FUNFEST Tuesday, September 30 from 9:00 am to 1:30 pm at the Maryland Heights Centre, 2344 McKelvey Road. You can also pick up your copies after the event has ended as late as 5:30 pm. The FUNFEST event will have exhibitor booths, health screenings, live entertainment, bingo, and a whole lot more. Call 636- 225-2442 for more information.

HOUSING RESOURCES

GE Targets Boomers With Diverse Abilities

Although each of us has a unique profile consisting of height, age, ability, strengths, weaknesses, and preferences, most homes are designed to fit a "standard" person. As a result, many of us struggle to reach or operate sink fixtures, cabinets, and appliances.

Universal Design is a design concept that meets the needs of people with varied abilities. It not only addresses the current difficulties people face, but also the possible physical challenges later in life.

"The time has come for kitchens and homes that fit the real needs of real people-needs that will change over time," observed Marc Hottenroth, Industrial Design Leader for GE Consumer & Industrial. "Our Industrial Design team will continue to take a leadership role in addressing these issues," he said.

The Appliance Division of GE Consumer & Industrial teamed up with members of the Carnegie Mellon School of Design and over the past three years have compiled data and statistics and cite changing demographics in America are adding urgency to addressing these design issues.

- The senior population is growing at three times the rate of the general population.
- Currently, thirteen percent of Americans are over the age of 65; a figure that will grow to almost twenty percent by 2030.
- By the year 2014, all baby-boomers will have celebrated their 50th birthdays, received their AARP® cards.
- More than half of Americans expect to have elder care responsibilities within the next 10 years or simply want to be able to entertain and host family members and friends, of all abilities, in their homes.

During Phase I field research was conducted with elder and late baby-boomer communities including personal interviews and observations of consumers in their homes. Focus groups were conducted with this population and comments and observations were reviewed. In addition, a review of literature and compiling of demographic information and statistics were important steps in the study.

The University researchers and GE Industrial Design participants also gathered knowledge from empathy sessions. Participants taped their knuckles and wore gloves to simulate arthritis, put cotton balls in their ears to simulate a decrease in hearing, and wore special glasses that simulated vision impairment such as macular degeneration. This role-playing simulation allowed them to experience firsthand what an aging consumer or special needs consumer might experience when operating an appliance. The group also consulted with health care professionals and gerontologists.

"Phase II consisted of direct application of this knowledge to generate appliance design concepts that would meet many of these needs," noted Hottenroth. "Two dimensional and three dimensional sketching of appliance prototypes were made and sketch models and form studies created," he continued.

Phase III will continue with the testing of these prototypes and may include surveys, contextual observation and consumer acceptance testing. "Like the auto industry's concept cars, there are many design phases, testing and manufacturing challenges to face before a new product is brought to market," explained Hottenroth.

"GE may use the research to integrate into new product designs for the near future, but there are already many product offerings that accommodate a variety of needs when used with room design techniques that employ the concepts of Universal Design," according to Hottenroth.

VOLUNTEERING

AARP Study Shows Boomers Want to Volunteer More

Tens of millions of baby boomers and members of the Silent Generation, while not as civically active as the Greatest Generation in their younger years, are healthier, living longer and appear ready to increase their civic participation. In an effort to better understand the civic behaviors and attitudes of Americans and to help ground the research in the stories and perspectives of the Boomer and Silent Generations, AARP commissioned a series of focus groups and a nationally representative survey of Americans ages 44- 79 ("Experienced Americans").

- Four in ten Experienced Americans (41%) indicate they are very or somewhat likely to increase the amount of time they spend volunteering in the next 5 years, and nearly the same proportion (39%) of retired Americans report that they did increase their volunteering when they retired.
- Not only are Experienced Americans interested in volunteering more, but most are able to do so. A majority (53%) of Experienced Americans are unimpeded by health or care giving for relatives in their home.
- Fifty-two percent of respondents said that their desire to "help people in need" was an extremely important motivation for volunteering, followed by 48 percent who identified the desire to "stay healthy and active."

- Respondents expressed the most interest in volunteering through faith-based or religious groups (45%), by mentoring or tutoring young people (40%), and by helping older adults live independently (38%).
- Respondents also identified key barriers to their civic engagement: They prefer to volunteer without a regular schedule (79%). They have no time (70%). They have not been asked (68%). They need to make money (54%).

The many talents of millions of baby boomers and members of the Silent Generation cannot remain on the sidelines in the face of so many pressing community problems, among them staggering high school dropout rates and millions of Americans who need services to live independently in their homes. Our effectiveness in engaging these extraordinary generations of Americans—meeting them where they are, sensitive to their motivations and barriers, and pulling institutional levers to encourage them to give more—will make the difference in whether our country fulfills its civic promise.

Peter D. Hart Research Associates in association with Civic Enterprises conducted this research for AARP. A total of 1,012 adults aged 44-79 completed a national telephone survey during June 6-11, 2008. Respondents included Baby Boomers born 1946- 1964 and Silent Generation members born 1929- 1945. The sample included a representative nationwide base sample of 808 adults ages 44-79, with oversamples of 104 African Americans and 100 Hispanics ages 44-79. In addition, four focus groups were conducted in April 2008 with older adults who expressed some level of willingness to increase their volunteering. For more information, contact James Dau at 202-434-2531 or Jordan McNerney at 202-434- 2569.

EMPLOYMENT

More Workers Employed After Traditional Retirement Years

Older workers in Ohio and nationwide will comprise a much higher portion of the workforce in the years to come, and employers should be prepared to accommodate and benefit from the experience and range of attributes they bring to the job, according to a report released this month by Miami University's Scripps Gerontology Center.

The report, "Ohio's Aging Workforce: Opportunities and Challenges for Ohio's Employers," stresses that the first wave of America's baby boomers has already reached the front end of traditional retirement years (55 and older) and that those age 55 and older will constitute nearly 30 percent of Ohio's overall population by the year 2020.

Accordingly, the report, citing U.S. Bureau of Labor statistics, states that older workers (those age 55 and older) are now the most rapidly growing segment of the Ohio and U.S. workforce. As a group, they are projected to increase nationwide by 47 percent from 2006 to 2016. In Ohio, the proportion of older workers in the state's workforce is expected to rise from 16.7 percent to 22.4 percent (an increase of 34 percent) in that same 10-year span. Other interesting projections from the report include:

- Two-thirds of Ohioans age 55 to 64 are expected to be in the state's workforce in 2016.
- Roughly 20 percent of Ohioans age 65 and older are expected to be in the state's workforce in the year 2016.
- By 2016, two-thirds of all job openings in Ohio are expected to be for positions replacing retirees.

The number of older persons in the workforce will not increase solely because of the growth in the older population, but also, the researchers note, because a high proportion (32 percent) of older workers have not saved for retirement and only about one-third expect to have employer-based health insurance after they leave employment. In some cases, though, older workers remain in the workforce simply because they enjoy their jobs, wish to stay active, mentally alert and/or find their work fulfilling.

The report, authored by gerontology doctoral student Lydia Manning, and Shahla Mehdizadeh, senior research scholar at Scripps and adjunct associate professor of gerontology and sociology - and produced in consultation with the Ohio Dept. of Aging - includes profiles of several older workers in Ohio and touches on the general virtues of older employees, such as better work ethic; lower absenteeism; lower turnover; flexibility in scheduling; and job-specific skills. The report also lists incentives that some companies are offering to retain workers, such as flexible schedules, employee discounts and eldercare benefits.

Volunteer Opportunities

Help Future Generations! The Alzheimer's Disease Research Center, Memory and Aging Project at Washington University is seeking volunteers to participate in a study as a comparison to a group of people whose parents had Alzheimer's disease. The aim of the study is to determine tests that may help early diagnosis and future treatments for Alzheimer's disease. You may be eligible to participate if you are 1) Healthy, age 45-74 2) If both of your parents lived (or are still living) to age 70 or older and never developed Alzheimer's disease (dementia). There will be clinical assessment, psychometric testing, blood draws, MRI (Magnetic Resonance Imaging) scan of the brain, lumbar puncture and PET scan (Positron Emission Tomography). Compensation is provided for time and effort. If you are interested, please call the study coordinator, Becky Fierberg at 314-286- 2683.

- Pathways Community Hospice invites you to volunteer and make a difference during life's final journey. Volunteers visit patients in homes or nursing homes, offer companionship and support, and some volunteers may sit with a home patient if the caregiver requires a short time away. Volunteers share approximately 2 hours per week in areas that are convenient for them. Training is provided and schedule flexibility is available. For more information, call Joyce Day, Volunteer Coordinator, at 636-733-7399 or email jday@pathwayshospice.com.
- Saint Louis University researchers are recruiting volunteers to participate in a study that tests a medication to treat mild to moderate Alzheimer's disease. The research will be conducted at the Wohl Memorial Institute, 1221 S. Grand Blvd., and will involve about 355 participants from up to 85 centers in 11 countries. Saint Louis University expects to enroll 10 study volunteers. Participants will be randomly divided into five groups. For three months, they will receive one of three doses of an investigational medication; another medication currently used to treat Alzheimer's disease; or a placebo. This portion of the study includes eight visits. Those who qualify for the study can't be taking a medication for memory problems or cognitive impairment, must be at least 50 and must be accompanied by a caregiver for study appointments. George Grossberg, M.D., Samuel W. Fordyce Professor and director of geriatric psychiatry at Saint Louis University, is the principal investigator. For information, call 314-268-5385.

- Researchers at Washington University School of Medicine are conducting studies for seniors age 65 and older who had hip surgery within the past four months. They are investigating the effects of exercise combined with testosterone replacement therapy on improving physical function and bone density. Patients who lived independently in the community before the surgery are eligible to participate. Transportation to the medical center is available at no charge. For more information call Toni at 314-286-2716.
- The Saint Louis County Department of Human Services County Older Resident Programs (CORP) needs volunteers to assist older adults with a variety of services, including transportation to doctors, grocery shopping and respite (relief time for caregivers). Retired professionals are needed to provide free income tax assistance, non-litigation legal consultations and notarize documents. Administrative volunteers are needed to set up income tax appointments and assist in CORP's Legal Services and Home Care and Repair offices. CORP volunteer positions are located throughout St. Louis County. Training and mileage reimbursements are offered, as well as flexible hours and short-term commitments for some positions. CORP services are available free of charge to St. Louis County residents, 60 years and older, who live independently in the community. For information regarding CORP volunteer opportunities and/or services, please call 314/615-4516, TTY 314/615- 4425, or email esherman@stlouisco.com.
- The Alzheimer's Association is seeking volunteers to help staff an information booth at the Illinois State Fair in Springfield, IL. Springfield is about 2 hours from St. Louis, approximately 100 miles away. The fair runs from Friday August 8 - Sunday August 17, 2008. We are hoping to have 2 volunteers work each day from 10:00 - 6:00 pm. Constant coverage is not necessary: Volunteers have free reign to take breaks as needed, mingle at the fair, and check out the exhibits. As an incentive, volunteers will receive free admission to the event and free parking. Volunteers will also receive free overnight accommodations at a local hotel in exchange for their service. The room is a double occupancy room with two full beds. It would be ideal if both volunteers know each other so the room is comfortably shared. A small group of friends are welcome to volunteer together if they are comfortable with the provided accommodations. Springfield is a great city with a lot of nice local attractions. Aside from being the state capital, there are also many historic sites and the well-known new Lincoln Museum. If you are interested in volunteering to work a day at the fair, please contact Jennifer Phillips at 314-801-0414 or jennifer.phillips@alzstl.org.
- The Jewish Community Center Adult Day Services needs volunteers to assist in a variety of ways including: interest group leaders that would develop and lead a small group for a particular interest or activity on a weekly or every other week basis; entertainers that could come in to provide musical or other types of entertainment to supplement the professional entertainers that we have; assisting the activity department with special activities or arts and crafts projects.

Volunteers will receive orientation and training. Come be a part of a very caring and professional staff and wonderful, loving adults with Alzheimer's and other dementias, developmental disabilities, social isolation, and other special needs. It is truly a rewarding experience. For more information please call Audrey Schneider, Activity Director, at 314-442-3249.

- Do you enjoy public speaking? Do you have a passion for helping families affected by memory loss? The Alzheimer's Association needs volunteers to present information to organizations in your area. They provide training and guidance each step of the way. Volunteers for this role typically have professional and/or family experience with memory loss. Professionals in the field of elder care (nurses, marketing professionals, social workers, doctors) are an especially strong match. Family members who have experienced the changes of Alzheimer's disease in a family member are also well-suited. If you are familiar with the subject, an effective communicator, and interested in helping families, this is a tremendous opportunity. If you are not confident about the subject matter, training and support is provided. To learn more, please email or call Jennifer Phillips, Alzheimer's Association, St. Louis Chapter at jennifer.phillips@alzstl.org or 314-801-0414.
